
need software sequencer

Posted by dirge - 2006/09/29 22:44

as part of moving i had to give up the monomachine... so all i have is a novation x-station and a macbook. anyone have any suggestions for a software sequecer that would have a similar creative flow to the mono. i have the x-station which can function quite well as a control surface for most programs, so interface is less of a concern than workflow (if that makes sense) suggestions?

(yes, buying a monomachine would be the best way around this, but i don't have the money- everything went for university housing)

Re: need software sequencer

Posted by monofever - 2006/09/30 01:10

You could have lived in a dumpster and stolen power from nearby buildings. Really the MnM would be worth it.

If you are OSX then Numerology is good.

Re: need software sequencer

Posted by - 2006/09/30 02:29

+1 for numerology
its the shitbomb banana.
I dunno if its anything like the MnM tho

out of interest, what instruments do you want to sequence ?

Re: need software sequencer

Posted by dirge - 2006/09/30 15:14

thanks!!

numerology does look interesting... certainly affordable

i would be sequencing software instruments, the novation x-station, and a midibox sid (just got the final bit of parts i needed).

Re: need software sequencer

Posted by - 2006/09/30 16:48

kool,
numerology2 just went into very early beta testing...
and apparently there will be a 'Pro' version in the future, probably numerology 2.5 (which will be a paid for upgrade)
oh and the price is going up in the next few days to $99, if it hasnt already.

I'm new to numerology, and so far I'm recording midi sequences into ableton live's session view for re/arranging and then onto some hardware, or ableton's impulse/simpler

This combo is great so far, the main attraction for me was the old-skool analog style sequencer - its dope, if you like that kind of thing. There's another sequencer worth checking out called NORTRON...same concept, more expensive - I took to numerology tho, and I lucked out and got a license for 25 euro

plus, Jim (mr numerology) is a nice guy, so nice infact that numerology 2 is gonna be a free upgrade

I really want some endless rotaries to use with this software....

=====