

---

anyone using fx pedals in their rig?

Posted by jhs - 2006/01/02 04:21

---

ive seen these and have always thought they'd be great for cheap fx units. recently i started seeing some studio pics with a lot of pedals and im curious as to how people use these? it seems they would be a nice hw fx solution that offers unlimited flexibility in the signal chain.. anyone into this and have any recommendations for pedals??

=====

Re: anyone using fx pedals in their rig?

Posted by milkmansnd - 2006/01/02 04:31

---

when I played live this summer I had an old DOD FX9 delay pedal in the rig for simple delay stuff off of an aux send. However, the thing was not great at line level, so I had fudge it a little bit.

pedals are a lot of fun, but they are usually not meant to handle line level signals - they are used to the really low output really high impedance guitar pickup input. Some are more forgiving than others.

=====

Re: anyone using fx pedals in their rig?

Posted by jsrocket - 2006/01/02 14:41

---

I do. I use a Boss Digital Delay at times...the DD-6...which has sampling, warp and loop features. Mostly on vocals I use this. Though they aren't true pedals...some guitar players use them... I have a Metasonix TM-1 Waveshaper and a Frostwave Sonic Alienator (decimator).

=====